SOLUTION BRIEF

Outward Leadership

Leaders' best efforts often fall short when conflict, communication, and collaboration challenges get in the way. Yet their efforts succeed when they have the mindset, knowledge, and skills to lead their organization in the face of constant change.

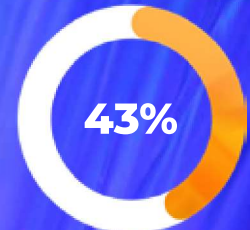

70% of transformation and leadership development efforts fail because they focus on behaviors alone and don't take into account the mindset that drives behavior.

Turn the Fundamentals of Leadership Inside-Out

Arbinger takes a different approach. Because mindset is at the core of behavior change, the key to success lies in empowering leaders to shift from holding people accountable to creating accountable people. Outward Leadership, Arbinger's leadership development solution, equips leaders with both the mindset and skillset to lead people-centric teams and results-focused organizations.

"Arbinger had a remarkable accelerator effect. It radically reshaped the business by changing the way we interfaced as a team."

Louise Francesconi
Division President, Raytheon

Increased Trust in Leaders

Confidence that leaders see and respond to employee needs measured post-implementation in a major metropolitan hospital.

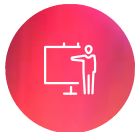

Increase in Sales Volume

Top-line results from a steel supplier 3 years after working with Arbinger and during a period when the market for steel products shrunk by 40%.

A Year-Long Transformation Partnership

Everyone knows that real transformation in leaders doesn't happen in a training alone. It is a process. Outward Leadership includes the key elements required to enable deep, sustained change delivered in partnership over time to help you create the transformation that drives a dramatic shift in results.

2-Day Live Training

An intensive workshop to equip leaders with a new mindset & skillset (conducted live in-person or online).

8 Application Sessions

Cohort coaching sessions enable leaders to systematically apply accountability, collaboration, & management tools.

Strategic Working Sessions

Half or full-day strategic leadership sessions (in-person or virtual) to track progress and provide guidance.

Outward Performance

Access to Arbinger's course materials to experience the training designed for front-line contributors.

12 Coaching Sessions

Twelve individualized coaching sessions with key leaders to tackle individual leadership challenges.

Partnership Management

Dedicated implementation management helps cohort sponsors measure success and ensure lasting change.

Key Outcomes

Develop Emotionally Aware and Effective Leaders

People leave leaders, not organizations. Equip your leaders with immediately practical tools to reduce the people friction that impedes results by creating new levels of emotional and situational awareness.

Enhance Productivity and Boost Performance

Nothing creates a shift in results faster than enabling a shift from holding people accountable to developing accountable people. Equip leaders with tools required to create a culture of accountability that drives sustained growth.

Improve Employee Retention and Engagement

Help leaders increase retention and eliminate the high cost of turnover through the application of conflict resolution, relationship building, intra- and inter-team collaboration, and communication tools.

SOLUTION BRIEF

Outward Performance

While most organizations strive to create a culture that drives exceptional performance, 90% of employees don't behave in ways that are aligned with cultural goals set by their leadership.

It is impossible to impose a culture of success by fiat; employees must buy into the process. The behaviors that limit the performance your organization needs won't change until the mindset that underlies those limitations changes first.

Maximizing Performance Starts by Changing Mindset

Instead of addressing the symptoms that reduce performance and productivity, Outward Performance addresses the source: mindset. Clients who use Outward Performance to transform their culture are able to build more productive, engaged, and inclusive teams by enabling a fundamental shift from the myopic, self-focus of an inward mindset to the expansive, impact-focus of an outward mindset.

"Performance has dramatically increased because people have real clarity and feel deeply empowered. We're all on the same team now."

Carla DeBow
VP of Marketing, CenturyLink

Increase in Productivity

65% more product shipped by a large medical supplier during 6 months after implementing Outward Performance, with no increase in staffing.

Increase in Sales Performance

Impact on total sales in a multi-country region within a $272 Billion multi-national retailer.

A Unique Learning Experience

Outward Performance is a video-driven course delivered to teams in either a two-day, intensive workshop or in ten 90-minute sessions implemented over time.

Over 30 videos that powerfully illustrate key concepts with real-life stories of on-the-job application enable participants to apply the practical tools to their own work and to interactions as a team. The workbook includes the video content, learning exercises, and downloadable tools to enable sustained application.

Repairing and Rebuilding Relationships

Key Outcomes

Unlock New Levels of Collaboration

The key to making team synergy skyrocket is arming each team member with radical self-awareness. Seeing ourselves and others more clearly enables us to improve our impact.

Resolve Conflicts that Reduce Productivity

Behavior change alone doesn't transform tension. Changing mindset addresses the root of challenging situations, eliminates friction, and enables teammates to see each other as people.

Prevent Burnout by Boosting Morale

Empowered employees are happier and more productive. Energize your employees by giving them tools to transform their relationships and take ownership for their success.

Outward Inclusion

AN OUTWARD MINDSET APPROACH TO EQUITY,
DIVERSITY, INCLUSION, AND BELONGING

Too many organizational efforts to address diversity and inclusion focus on behaviors alone. The marginalizing and discriminatory behaviors we are trying to address are behavioral manifestations of something deeper than behavior—mindset. For this reason, if we engage in change efforts that do not address mindset—nothing will change.

Arbinger’s Outward Inclusion workshop equips organizations with the tools to address the mindset and behaviors that get in the way of creating the culture your organization needs. Outward Inclusion guides participants through a process of self- discovery to help participants uncover bias and become equipped with practical tools to create an inclusive workplace that celebrates diversity and fosters real belonging.

Features of Outward Inclusion

Addresses intersectionality and inclusion among all groups rather than a few

Enables both mindset change and behavior change rather than focusing on behavioral prescriptions

Uses authentic, real-life stories and experiences rather than sterile, scripted role-playing

Calls people “in” to participate in dialogue and transformational conversations

Creates a psychologically safe environment and enthusiasm for change

Focuses on self-discovery through active participation, personal assessments, and group exercises

“The information was thought provoking and the questions made you dig deep within yourself, as I would have expected from an Arbinger training. I came away with a new perspective on how to approach hiring and promoting without bias, rethinking boundaries, feedback, and how to create inclusion in the workplace.”

BRITTA HOLLOWAY
Funeral Director and Director of Training & Development

Program Format

Outward Inclusion is a one-day workshop appropriate for employees at all levels of the organization from the c-suite to the front-line.

Participants encounter powerful concepts, utilize illuminating assessments, learn how to use practical tools, and engage in transformational conversations that change the way they see themselves and those around them. The workshop also includes an introduction to application modules that provide practical tools to implement lasting change.

Participants receive access to the interactive digital Outward Inclusion workbook. This digital workbook includes the course videos, assessments, and tools as well as application modules and sustainment videos that help deepen learning and sustain ongoing implementation. Printed materials are available for an additional cost.

This workshop has no prerequisites.

Train-the-Trainer

Individuals can become certified to facilitate Outward Inclusion within their own organization by participating in the one-day Outward Inclusion Facilitator Training workshop. Attending Outward Inclusion is a prerequisite for this workshop.

Learning Objectives

Outward Inclusion

- Become equipped with tools to foster safe, honest, self-reflective, and productive dialogues
- Understand the origin and nature of bias
- Explore the impact of stereotyping, labeling, and exaggerating differences
- Apply frameworks and tools to reduce bias, increase belonging, and influence change

Application Modules

- Understand the value of diversity and the dangers of tokenism
- Develop a practical and healthy way to promote diversity
- Identify and correct practices and structures that erode equity and inclusion
- Apply frameworks and tools to improve equity and create a culture of belonging

Outward Inclusion Facilitator Training

Overview

The Outward Inclusion Facilitator Training is a one-day intensive train-the-trainer workshop that equips individuals with the tools and resources necessary to facilitate Outward Inclusion within their organization. This workshop is available in both virtual and in-person formats.

In addition to learning how to facilitate the workshop in their organization, participants also learn how to create the right learning environment and lead impactful discussions that create meaningful connection and belonging within their organization. Participants are also equipped with the tools necessary to lead the implementation of the principles in Outward Inclusion throughout the organization.

Upon successful completion of this one-day course, participants are certified to utilize the Outward Inclusion training and implementation materials in their organization.

Workshop Format

Participants learn to facilitate Outward Inclusion and its accompanying application modules within their own organization (either in-person or virtually). Participants explore the differences between Outward Inclusion and traditional DEI approaches, understand conceptual overviews of each section, observe an experienced facilitator demonstrate how to lead group discussions and address challenging topics, discuss key points and issues, and learn how to develop a plan for transformation and sustainment. To retain learning, participants practice facilitating the workshop with a partner.

Results and Outcomes

Participants will become equipped to:

- Effectively facilitate the workshop and develop organizational implementation plans
- Create a safe, outward space for participants to discuss challenging topics
- Compellingly illustrate key principles
- Assist leaders in operationalizing the course concepts to foster greater belonging in their organization

Ongoing Support

Outward Inclusion Facilitator Training includes exclusive access to a suite of resources:

- The Arbinger Portal where participants can download presentation decks and access facilitator resources
- A facilitator support helpline to access live, personalized support
- One-on-one assistance before delivering workshops and post-facilitation discussion and processing to help facilitator improve their skills and impact

Implementation Coaching

SESSIONS FOR LEADERS

THE ARBINGER PROCESS

Arbinger helps organizations and their people develop an outward mindset in three steps: Mindset change, leader development, and systems improvement.

Step 1, mindset change, begins with a foundational training in which participants learn and apply four sets of tools:

- Self-awareness tools
- Mindset-change tools
- Accountability tools
- Collaboration tools

In Step 2, leaders acquire additional tool sets to help them and their teams work with an outward mindset. Each training in the three-step Arbinger process ends with participants creating a plan to apply what they've learned.

IMPLEMENTATION COACHING OVERVIEW

Once equipped with the tools from the training, it becomes incumbent on leaders to implement what they learned, both for themselves individually and for their teams. To facilitate this, leaders and leadership teams can engage with an Arbinger implementation coach to implement and embed the tools learned in these courses into their and their teams' practices.

Implementation coaches have experience successfully implementing outward mindset practices in many organizations. They function much like a sports coach, helping leaders build new habits and develop the skills acquired in the training, as well as acting as an accountability partner.

FORMAT

This program generally includes six sessions held over the course of three months. In each session, the coach and leader assess progress against the implementation plan, address any roadblocks, and then apply a tool (or set of tools) to various business situations that the leader is facing. Coaching conversations last 45 minutes and take place over the phone or through a conferencing link.

WHO RECEIVES COACHING?

While implementation coaching is not necessary for all employees, it is strongly recommended for leaders or leadership teams aiming to build an outward mindset culture in their teams or organizations.

SUPPORT

The implementation coaching program includes six implementation coaching sessions, access to the sustainment resources on the Arbinger Portal, and tailored consultations with an Arbinger client solutions manager.

CONFIDENTIALITY

All personal and private information disclosed in the coaching relationship with the client will be held in the strictest confidence and will NOT be shared by the Coach with anyone. Such disclosure is in direct violation of the International Coaching Federation Code of Ethics to which Arbinger subscribes.

RESULTS AND OUTCOMES

Leaders with an outward mindset invite their teams to be more aware of and accountable for their impact on others, and to work in ways that align, vertically and laterally, with organizational goals. The implementation coaching program equips leaders to:

- Enhance collaboration and cooperation and encourage peak performance through adopting an outward mindset.
- Apply and embed appropriate outward mindset tools into their team's day-to-day operations.
- Lead, develop and support others in becoming more aware and aligned in achieving collective outcomes.
- Analyze and create a plan for addressing roadblocks.
- Better understand how to measure adoption and sustain implementation success.

ABOUT THE ARBINGER INSTITUTE

The Arbinger Institute delivers training, consulting, coaching, and digital tools to help individuals and organizations change mindset, transform culture, accelerate collaboration, resolve conflict, and sustainably improve results.

Arbinger introduced its ideas to a worldwide readership with its first book, Leadership and Self-Deception, in 2000. The book is a word-of-mouth phenomenon that has been translated into over thirty languages. This was followed by a second international best-seller, The Anatomy of Peace, in 2006, which presents Arbinger's unique approach to conflict resolution and personal growth. Arbinger's newest book, The Outward Mindset, was published in 2016. The Outward Mindset focuses on how to achieve mindset change both individually and organizationally.

Founded in 1979, Arbinger has worked with thousands of organizations across every industry. As a result of this forty-year-plus track record with clients, Arbinger is recognized as a world leader in the areas of mindset change, leadership, team building, conflict resolution, crisis management, and culture change. Arbinger's clients range from individuals who are seeking help in their lives to many of the largest companies and governmental institutions in the world.

This whitepaper outlines the results of a study conducted by researchers at Georgetown and Cornell Universities from October 2016 through October 2017. The results of the study demonstrate that Arbinger's training and implementation programs significantly improve employee performance and attitudes, increasing several variables that positively impact organizational culture and employee engagement.

STUDY DESIGN

The results outlined in this paper are based on a series of surveys delivered in a study conducted at a military hospital with 1400 employees located in the mid-western United States. Surveys were administered to a control group, two baseline groups, and four treatment groups. The control group did not receive Arbinger training. The baseline and treatment groups all received Arbinger training, but the baseline groups only completed pre-training surveys. The treatment groups completed both pre-training and post-training surveys. Groups were carefully selected at each stage of the study to be as close in size, patient population, clinical acuity, and other measurable baseline metrics as possible.

TIMELINE

All groups completed an initial survey measuring certain measures of mindset such as attitudes regarding employee empowerment, management support, and collaboration (see Figure 1).

The treatment and baseline groups then participated in Arbinger's two-day Developing and Implementing an Outward Mindset (DIOM) workshop.

Approximately eight weeks after the DIOM workshop, the control group and the treatment groups completed another survey—almost identical to the initial survey—to measure whether and to what extent the treatment groups had changed mindset and behavior as a result of the workshop.

The study was conducted over the course of about one year, with workshops delivered approximately every other month and with approximately 100-150 employees in each treatment group. Senior leaders attended the first two rounds of workshops; front line employees attended thereafter.

In addition, for the control group and Treatment Groups 1 and 2, approximately four months after the DIOM workshop each participant's supervisor completed a survey about the participant's performance and effectiveness compared to four months prior (i.e., compared to before the workshop).

LEADERS IMPROVE PERSPECTIVE-TAKING AND SATISFACTION

Two to three months after participating in Arbinger's DIOM workshop (in November and December 2016), leaders reported improvements in their ability and desire to understand others' perspectives. They also indicated increased satisfaction with management and the organization. These improvements all showed a statistically significant increase ($p < .001$).

These improvements laid a solid foundation for outward mindset to spread throughout the organization. As leaders began to change how they saw and interacted with their employees—becoming, essentially, better leaders—they made it easier for those employees to change as well (see Figure 2).

EMPLOYEES IMPROVE PERSPECTIVE-TAKING AND SATISFACTION

Looking at the front-line employees for whom both pre- and post-training surveys were collected (Treatment Groups 2, 3, and 4), the study found an improvement after training in these groups' perceptions of collaboration, others' intentions, and management support, with each showing a statistically significant increase ($p < .001$ for these groups) (see Figure 3).

The improvements in satisfaction with the information received from managers and involvement in decisions affecting the employee's work are particularly significant, as they speak to the employee's relationships with and perceptions of their managers. Many of these managers attended outward mindset training as part of Treatment Group 1 and had begun implementing what they'd learned with their employees. These results indicate that employees' experience of their managers did shift significantly, most likely because both the employees and managers had experienced mindset shifts.

SUPERVISOR SURVEY RESULTS

Based on the surveys completed by supervisors regarding their employees, the effects of training were even more marked.

1. Arbinger's training increases employee cooperation and collaboration by 12%.

Comparing month-on-month performance as rated by their supervisors, test group employees scored 12.14% higher than control group employees in terms of cooperation and collaboration.

2. Arbinger's training increases an employee's personal investment in their work by 11%.

Test group employees were rated 10.98% higher by their supervisors in terms of improvements in their personal investment in their work.

These findings are particularly meaningful because they are not self-scored results collected shortly after an Arbinger training, but a supervisor's assessment of behavior and performance four months after training. The length of time and outside perspective indicate these changes are observable and at least somewhat sustained.

ARBINGER'S CONTAGION EFFECT

This study also revealed an Arbinger contagion effect (see Figure 4). As indicated above, when leaders took Arbinger's training, they themselves improved (as self-reported and measured by their supervisors) in terms of performance, attitude, and engagement. Remarkably, their subordinates who had not yet taken the training also showed significant improvements in attitude, commitment, awareness, and empowerment.

These improvements were measured several months after the employees' leaders had received the training and showed that:

- Untrained employees felt more psychologically safe.
- Untrained employees had a greater commitment to the organization.
- Untrained employees felt more empowered.
- Untrained employees felt increased support and advocacy from their leaders.
- Untrained employees were more focused on how they impacted others.
- Untrained employees had greater perceptions of the utility of working collaboratively.

DRAMATIC IMPROVEMENT IN OVERALL HOSPITAL RATING AND PATIENT SATISFACTION

According to the quarterly data collected by the Military Health System, during the period of this study, the hospital improved in the category of “Overall Hospital Rating”, by 30.65% compared to the average improvement of 3.90% for all other military hospitals of comparable size and service in the United States. Additionally, patients’ willingness to recommend this hospital to others increased by 20.59% compared to the average improvement of 2.52% for all other military comparable hospitals.*

While causation cannot be proved, the data is highly suggestive, indicating that Arbinger’s training had an effect not only on employees’ interactions with each other but also on the hospital staff’s interactions with patients, which could account for the dramatic increase in overall hospital rating and patient satisfaction.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Given the findings of this study, we offer a few observations and recommendations. First, shifting to an outward mindset can increase perspective-taking. Empathy in the workplace, and especially in healthcare, is shown to have significant benefits to the organizational culture, employee relations, and patient relations. This study's results suggest that outward mindset principles improve perceptions of others and perspective-taking, especially among frontline staff. Frontline staff's ability to empathize with patients offers a possible explanation as to why patients rated the overall hospital with higher scores over the course of this study.

Second, encourage all leadership to implement an outward mindset before introducing the principles to their subordinates. As the results demonstrate, when leadership begins implementing outward mindset principles, so do subordinates even when they haven't been exposed to those principles themselves. Simply by implementing outward mindset principles, leaders can help their staff feel more psychologically safe, committed, empowered, collaborative, and accountable. Moreover, when subordinates of outward-minded leaders do attend a training, it yields even higher performance improvement.

Finally, this study reinforces an important principle in organizational change: it starts with individuals and builds as individuals influence one another. An organization that is committed to building an outward mindset culture will prepare and help people shift and maintain an outward mindset—even when others haven't yet made the shift. When the goal is to achieve organization-wide changes, it's important to remember that the most important step is for us to take the most important step. When we do, it's possible that the changes we're hoping to make as an organization just might become contagious.

Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard & IMF News Since 1946

SHIPYARD LOG

January 2021

ALL FOR ONE, AND ONE FOR ALL

PHNSY & IMF Examines Its Four Core Values

Capt. Greg Burton, USN
47th Commander
Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and Intermediate Maintenance Facility

Before I started kindergarten, I decided that I was going to collect coins – quarters. At only four years old, I was looking through my house, in dad's drawers, in mom's purse, and so on. I did not think there was anything wrong with amassing quarters from my parents until I was found out. I quickly learned the value of treating things that belong to others with respect, that work is required for earnings, and that stealing was not part of our family culture.

From my first experience with values, as simple as it was, I recognize that we all grow up with values based on our upbringing. We bring those values into the shipyard. In addition to personal values, there are community values, workplace values, national values, etc. This issue of the Shipyard Log focuses on our shipyard values.

The strength of our shipyard 'Ohana is directly tied to our foundational values of Aloha, Honor, Courage and Commitment. Periodically reviewing our values is important to ensure we are frequently reminded what is important to us and that we all stay aligned to our core values. Our values guide our decision-making every day as we strive to treat each other right, look for ways to improve, and accomplish our essential mission here in the shipyard. We stand ready to answer the needs of the Fleet - we keep our Fleet Fit to Fight.

Our shipyard values bring us together, help us set priorities, and drive us to our vision. This was clear at the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic when our value of Aloha and taking care of our shipyard

Values – Foundational to the Strength of Our 'Ohana

'Ohana directly contributed to the priorities that were established: (1) protect the health of our people, (2) minimize the spread of the virus, and (3) maximize our mission. Without a common set of values and a commitment to our people, we could have easily seen ourselves driving only mission accomplishment at the expense of the health of our workforce. Our foundational values helped us balance protecting the health of our employees with accomplishing our mission.

With the implementation of the Outward Mindset program, our shipyard values now have practical tools to help us understand how to recognize our actions and choose to shift our mindset to help accomplish our collective mission. The implementation of Outward Mindset occurred because our Senior Leadership Team saw an opportunity to improve our productivity while learning to treat each other like people and with aloha. This learning resulted from our experience with the USS Missouri (SSN 782) project that finished five days early despite the pandemic and other challenges.

When we do NOT treat each other as people, we see each other in one of three ways: (1) as someone that can help us accomplish our work, (2) as a barrier to our work, or (3) as someone to be ignored. Seeing people as way to accomplish one's work may help one individual be 'successful' in their own mind. However, success in a complex shipyard is much more about making adjustments to one's own work to help others accomplish their work in a way that accomplishes our collective shipyard mission. This is a different way of thinking – an outward mindset – and a game changer for us.

Living out our shipyard values of Aloha, Honor, Courage and Commitment by using an Outward Mindset will launch us deeply into our culture of Nō Ka 'Oi. It will allow us the opportunity to be more innovative, more productive, and feel more value in the work that each one of us does in the shipyard to accomplish our mission together. Stay Nō Ka 'Oi.

Commander, NAVSEA

Sight Lines: The Commander's View

The work NAVSEA does for our Navy is important. And more often than not, NAVSEA is in the press every day. You do at times need to read between the lines because we are not often mentioned by name, but we're there just the same because we are the Force Behind the Fleet. A recent example is the decision to keep USS Nimitz (CVN 68) on station in the Middle East due to hostile threats made by adversarial governments. Nimitz deployed out of San Diego in June 2020 and is still going strong. The crew is doing a phenomenal job, and we should be grateful to them and their families for their service.

Leadership's decision to extend the USS Nimitz was due in large part because of the tremendous work Puget Sound Naval Shipyard & IMF completed during the carrier's dry-docking planned incremental availability; completing all planned work, and some unplanned work, four days early in May 2019. The operational cycle of Navy ships, codified in the Optimized Fleet Response Plan, begins with maintenance, and for aircraft carriers and submarines, that is NAVSEA. That is you! Almost without exception, the maintenance and modernization work completed on these platforms is done at a Naval Shipyard. The warships you maintain and modernize are on the front line in today's era of great power competition. You are, and always have been, a resilient team. When our warships and submarines deploy, they take that resilience with them. Often, they operate forward and must remain on station for extended periods to complete the mission to deter aggression and, if needed, defeat our enemies.

In Nimitz's case, she and her battle group have remained deployed for more than eight months, and thanks to you, the combat power within a Carrier Battle Group is unlike anything our potential adversaries can muster. That is why she remains in the Arabian Gulf to ensure our enemies do not take hostile actions against us or our allies.

While the Nimitz Battle Group serves as a clear reminder of our Navy's might, our submarine force provides a separate, but equally critical, mission. We call them our Silent Service because our attack submarines combine unmatched stealth, speed, firepower, and endurance for the most lethal force the world has ever seen. Once a submarine dives, it can go in just about anywhere. This ability to rapidly and clandestinely deploy around the globe significantly complicates our adversaries' ability to plan and execute hostile activities.

Attack submarines and aircraft carriers are in high demand, and we simply do not have enough of either to meet our all of combatant commander's requests. Of the 57 commissioned attack submarines, eight are currently undergoing maintenance at Naval Shipyards and we are inducting four more in February. That is one-fifth of the attack submarine force. Your ability to return these submarines and aircraft carriers to the Fleet on time is critical to our national security.

Thank you for the great work you do on behalf of our Navy and our great country.

Keep Charging!

The Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and Intermediate Maintenance Facility (PHNSY & IMF) workforce participated in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve's Toys for Tots campaign for the first time this year. The shipyard-wide effort gathered more than 1,000 toys to support the Navy League of the United States (NLUS) Honolulu Council's effort in lieu of its annual Toys for Tots golf tournament that was suspended due to COVID-19.

The Morale, Welfare and Recreation Committee of Shop 51 (Code 980, Electrical) was a driving force in collecting toys. As a team, they decided to participate in the drive knowing how hard 2020 was for so many families.

"At a time of uncertainty for most people, we are very fortunate to have an income. Many had to worry about how to pay for housing and put food on their tables. Fortunately, we didn't. Therefore, during the holiday season we wanted to do our part and give back to our community. We felt Toys for Tots would be the best way for us to brighten the holiday spirit," said Dorothy Chong-Marzau, Shop 51 electrical mechanic.

In its 73rd year, Toys for Tots program relies on local communities to support its goal to collect new, unwrapped toys for children and families who may need a helping hand during the holiday season. Each year, Toys for Tots relies on local businesses and communities to support their goal to collect new, unwrapped toys and distribute them to less fortunate children in the community.

Honoring Their Lives and Legacy

By Capt. Greg Burton

Commander, Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard

This has been the toughest year of my life. As Commanding Officer of Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard, losing any member of our team, civilian or military, is devastating. After the tragic loss of Roldan Agustin and Vince Kapoi, Jr. one year ago on Dec. 4, 2019, I have had many waves of grief like I have never known before – and I’m not sure they will ever stop. No one should ever lose a loved one in such a tragic way. My wife and I continue to grieve for the loss of Roldan and Vince, Jr. Like their lives, December 4 will be permanently etched in our memories; and our hearts will always be with our shipyard ‘ohana, no matter where we are physically in the world.

On Friday, Dec. 4, 2020, we memorialized the lives of Roldan and Vince, Jr. with the blessing of a plaque to be permanently placed at the shipyard as a symbol of their legacy. Were it not for the pandemic, our shipyard ‘ohana of almost 7,000 strong would have surrounded Dry Dock 2 in tribute to these men. Instead, along with the Agustin, Kapoi, and Nakamine families, we were surrounded by many colorful lei placed on the railings, each brought by a member of our shipyard ‘ohana, not to remember the tragic way these men died, but to remember the honorable way they lived. The lei brought me back to a year ago when the railings in the shipyard were covered in the same way after Roldan and Vince, Jr.

were suddenly taken from us. As they did then, the lei united us together showing that no matter the physical distance, we will never forget these two men.

During the ceremony, Kahu Kordell Kekoa delivered a moving Hawaiian blessing to honor the legacy of these men, to memorialize their lives, and to dedicate the plaque that will stand for years to come. As part of the blessing, I had the privilege to place lei on the plaque continuing the journey of grief and healing throughout the last year. Kahu Kordell’s final remarks reverberated deeply with me when he said, “Your spirits can leave this place because your memory will always be here.”

In my grieving process, I have come to believe there is a healing power of gratitude. We are grateful to have known these men and for the impact they had on us all. Though it will never remove sorrow or sadness, expressing gratitude is a means of soothing our pain. It helps provide a broader perspective of our lives and brings focus on what is really important. We remembered and honored Roldan's and Vince, Jr.'s lives in gratitude for what they shared with us in life.

These men were the types to go the extra mile. Roldan was kind and humble—always willing to lend a hand without hesitation. Vince, Jr. elevated those around him, always exemplifying the true meaning of kīnā'ole—doing the right thing, in the right way, at the right time, in the right place, to the right person, for the right reason, with the right feeling, the first time.

In gratitude for their lives and legacy, let us continue to honor them each day. Our civilian and military workforce share the same values and bonds – we are one shipyard 'ohana. Throughout the last year, we have grieved together and sought healing together; and we will continue to honor them together.

Join us as we honor their lives and legacy. Honor these two men by sharing aloha with each other every single day. Honor them by treating each other right and by remembering their ultimate sacrifice in the line of duty, in service to their country. Roldan Agustin and Vince

Kapoi, Jr. will never be forgotten, by family, by friends, nor by Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard.

Every time a ship enters the yards; every time a new apprentice class graduates; and every time a ship goes to sea from Pearl Harbor, Roldan and Vince, Jr. will be a part of that team. I am grateful for the aloha and legacy left by these two men. May how we live our lives be a reminder of the service, the sacrifice, and most importantly, the impact that Roldan Agustin and Vince Kapoi Jr. had on Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and our Navy.

For better or for worse, I treat my colleagues as family. At times, my own family will tell you it's hilarious; and at other times, maybe not so much. But at all times, I try to treat others with a sense of aloha, as defined by the village that raised me.

I grew up in a small plantation town, at a time when the sugar mill was still in operation. It was a community where the elders knew everyone, including your parents and where you lived. Children were looked after by everyone, and it was not uncommon for parents to get phone calls alerting them of a child's behavior, good or bad. Congratulatory calls commonly acknowledged good behavior or achievement. Alternatively, the elders also made calls to address behavior that may or may not require corrective actions. The awareness that your parents received such a call was usually enough to impact behavior moving forward. My parents welcomed such interactions as they understood the spirit in which the calls were made. Individual success became community success. Likewise, individual concern became community concern. This was aloha in practice.

When my shipyard career began, I gathered with about 100 other new employees in the Building 2 auditorium. We were introduced to several important individuals who welcomed us into the shipyard. They asked how we defined the shipyard values of honor, courage, commitment, and aloha. One brave classmate after another addressed each of the values. Their confidence was impressive as they each offered their definitions to a room full of strangers.

I sat quietly waiting for the last value, aloha, to be defined and thought to myself, "Whoa, that's a hard one to define." To be honest, my intention was to sit quietly and listen. Then to my surprise, I felt my hand rise, seemingly of its own volition. As the speaker turned to me, I felt the blood drain from my face. With as much confidence as I could muster, I offered, "Aloha is the essence or intrinsic nature or character of one person and the essence or intrinsic nature or character of another person. It is fortunate to recognize the relationship between the two people."

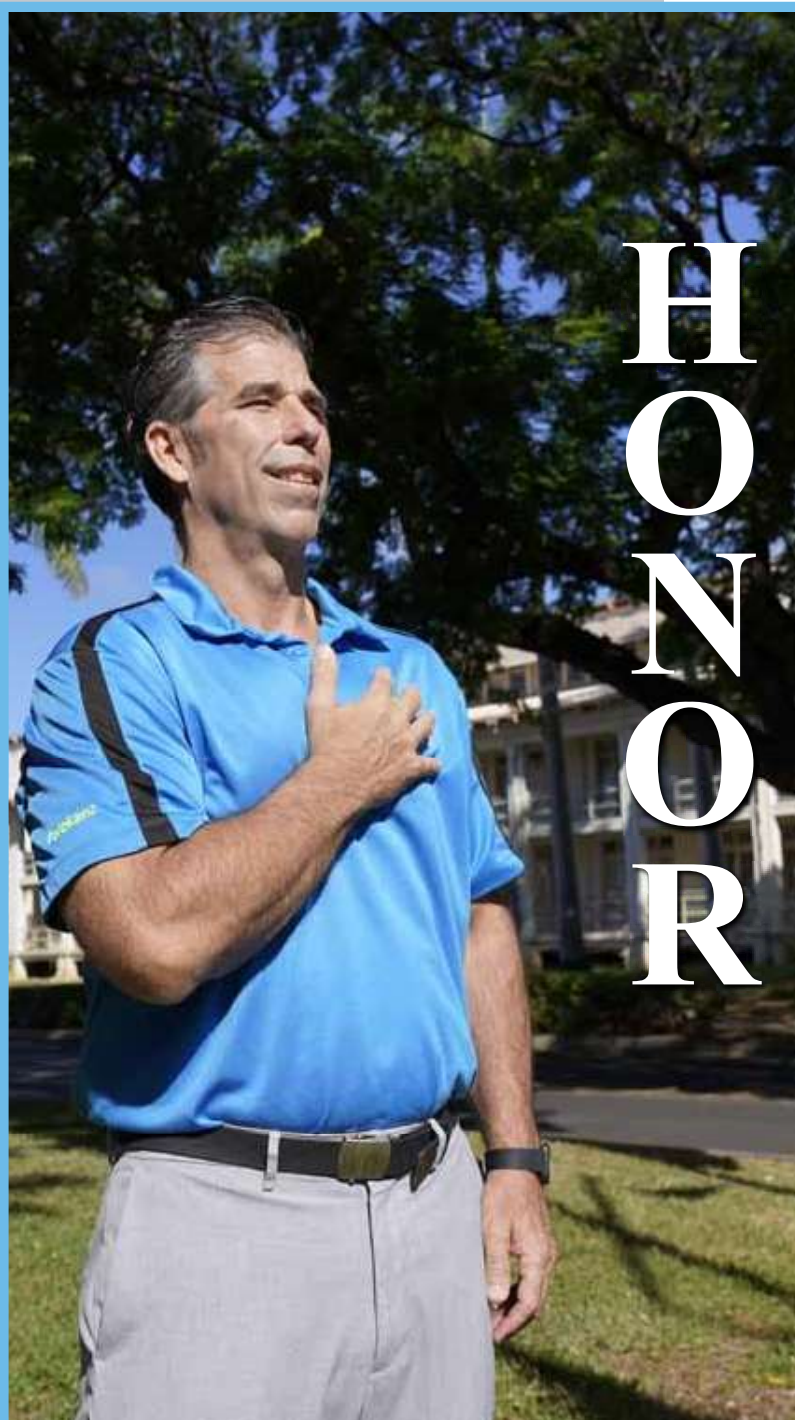

I humbly submit to you that, for me, aloha is the recognition of a relationship and the behavior that attempts to either strengthen it or lessen an adverse effect on it. It is knowing who you are and having the willingness to understand the world and your place within it. It is having the compassion to help create a perfect world.

In this new year, let us pledge to perform our tasks with aloha for ourselves, our colleagues, and for our nation's Navy that we keep "fit to fight." Let us have the compassion to offer help to others while also welcoming suggestions for self-improvement. Let us celebrate individual success with the acknowledgement that it elevate overall success and address individual concerns as community concerns. Let us treat each other with a sense of aloha, as defined by the ideas and experiences that raised us all.

HONOR

If you look up the word honor in the dictionary, you'll find 13 different definitions with 13 subcategories. To better understand what the word means to my colleagues, I posed the question to Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and Intermediate Maintenance Facility (PHNSY & IMF) workers. Unsurprisingly, I received 11 different perspectives with similar themes. Some of the responses included:

"Honor is a sense of pride for who and what I represent."

"Honor is pure. It means being thankful. Thankful for those who sacrificed personal time without a timestamp of hours."

"Honor is doing what's right; being pono (righteous)."

"Honor is doing things out of love, not for love."

"Honor is doing the right thing even when no one is looking."

"Honor accompanies the presence of integrity, accountability & service before self."

I believe that to honor others, you first have to learn to honor yourself. During my younger years, I truly thought that I was honoring others and myself. Through many of life lessons, advice from coaches and mentors, and hours of studying, I realized that my original perception was off; I did not honestly know how to honor myself.

You see, to truly honor myself, I needed to understand my belief system and its origin. I had to question if my views were indeed my own or if they were actually someone else's beliefs I had adopted based on that person's position, title, popularity or influence on me. I had to dig deep into my core self and understand my vision, mission and purpose in life along with the values that I truly believe in and live by. Once I understood who I was, I was able to honor myself by acting in accordance with my core beliefs.

Now that I understand my own internal process, honoring other people, places, things and cultures has become easier. Others may have different core beliefs and values because they were raised differently and had various people and ideas influence them. Although I may not share the same beliefs as other people, I am still able to honor them. In this world, people's beliefs are their perception, which is their reality.

So after my journey of self-discovery, you may ask what honor means to me. Honor is holding myself accountable for my actions based on my core beliefs and my life's vision, mission, purpose and values. Honor is also respecting others views and opinions based on their core beliefs as well as their life's vision, mission, purpose and values.

I would like to take the time to honor and thank Code 100PI. COURAGE

Often we find ourselves in situations where we experience an internal conflict between wanting to exhibit our true selves (i.e., our morals, values, and earned competency) while feeling the need to belong among our peers (i.e., our need to have friends, a hui (team) and an ohana). This internal conflict leaves us with a choice: we can choose to exhibit our true selves and potentially leave ourselves vulnerable to judgement or we can choose to hide among our peers because we fear that we may be deemed inadequate.

However, courage gives us the moral and mental strength to do what is right even in the face of fear or adversity. Our choice to step out in courage and do the right thing every time matters for our collective mission, our relationships, our families, and our nation.

I write this not as a superintendent, but as a fellow shipyarder speaking to my peers. I come to you with the vulnerability to put myself out there and say what needs to be said. I come with the humility to admit that I am no expert in what I am about to ask of you all as have failed and I will continue to fail. However, I know and believe that I will be better tomorrow. Lastly, I come with the empathy to understand that what I ask is no easy task and it definitely will make us all uncomfortable.

I humbly ask all shipyarders to help build a culture that recognizes the values we each bring to the table and allows us to treat each other with respect. Let us have the courage to stand up for what we know is right, regardless of the perception or adversity we may face. Let us stop being small – thinking inward does not serve each other. Let us allow others to shine their light because we recognize that no one is beneath us. Let us have the courage to shine our light amongst others as we are all in this together. Finally, let us not fear seeming inadequate in the eyes of our peers for we believe and know that we will be better tomorrow and our peers will support us. Have the courage to be vulnerable for vulnerability is true confidence.

I leave you with a quote from the film “Coach Carter” that has resonated with me and speaks to the challenge that I have asked of us all:

“Our deepest fear is not that we are inadequate. Our deepest fear is that we are powerful beyond measure. It is our light, not our darkness, that most frightens us. You playing small does not serve the world. There is nothing enlightened about shrinking so that other people won’t feel insecure around you. We are all meant to shine as children do. It’s not just in some of us; it is in everyone. And, as we let our own lights shine, we unconsciously give other people permission to do the same. As we are liberated from our own fear, our presence automatically liberates others.”

COMMITMENT

According to the U.S. Navy definition, commitment is the day-to-day duty of every man and woman in the Department of the Navy (DON) by joining as a team to improve the quality of our work, our people and ourselves. As DON employees, we are expected to:

- Foster respect up and down the chain of command.
- Care for the personal and spiritual well-being of our people.
- Show respect toward all people without regard to race, religion or gender.
- Always strive for positive change and personal improvement.
- Exhibit the highest degree of moral character, professional excellence, quality, and competence in all that we do.

When broken down, this means the following to me:

- Treat people like people.
- Understanding that people are complex, and while you may know them, you don't necessarily know every battle they have faced and what motivates their behavior.

For me, commitment has always meant doing what you say you're going to do. In today's complex and fast-paced world, sometimes commitments are forgotten or missed with no malintent. When this happens, own it. Strive to do better at continuing to meet your commitments and be willing to admit when you failed. I am not perfect at this practice, but I strive to grow every day and with growth comes change.

As a society, many learn best as a result of our own failures. Therefore, we need to be willing to accept that failure is going to happen from time to time and treat it as an opportunity for growth. Owning your failures allows others to own theirs without worry that they will be judged by their peers. This underscores my previous point: we are all human and no one is perfect.

In my 26 years of service, both as an active duty service member and a federal employee, I have had some great bosses that have enabled me to take on challenges. While I may have stumbled and fallen at times, they were always standing by to assist me in getting back up, brushing off the embarrassment of my failure, learning from the failure, and to try, try again. As I continue to develop in my management and leadership styles, I strive to be that kind of a manager/supervisor.

For anyone that knows me or has worked with me, I am direct and to the point, sometimes abruptly so. I have started to recognize that it can be perceived as self-centered or that I am brushing someone off even though I am just trying to be effective at communicating and respectful of both their time and mine. As I have continued to grow as a supervisor, I have recognized that when working with people, sometimes you have to slow down, take the time to say "good morning" and ask how they are doing. You must be genuinely interested in their response or they can tell that you are asking just to ask, not because you actually care.

My plea to our shipyard 'ohana in this new year is to show each other that you are genuinely committed to caring about each other's well-being. Our workdays are hectic and they will continue to get busier as the nation recovers from the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. However, commit to taking some time to care for our shipyard 'ohana. It will surely pay back in dividends to us all in the future.

Why Mindset Matters

Story by Jennifer Braden

Code 1180 Command University Division Head

Danny Kim, Arbinger Master Facilitator, facilitates an Outward Mindset workshop for PHNSY & IMF personnel. (Below): Code 900Q Performance Improvement Manager Kimberly Kalama shares her Outward Mindset experience during a recent workshop held at Bldg. 2 at PHNSY & IMF.

By implementing the Outward Mindset program and shifting the crew's mindset, personal accountability and performance improved dramatically. From October 2018 to June 2019, only one Captain's Mast proceeding was conducted. During the same period, reported liberty incidents decreased by 70%, only six test program problems due to watch standing errors occurred, and near-miss events requiring command-level critique decreased by 80%.

After Missouri docked at PHNSY & IMF, the crew invited the project team to shift their mindset, putting the project on the fast track to success as the crew and shipyard worked collaboratively to meet and beat the strict maintenance timeline by delivering five days early and saving millions of dollars. As a result of the Missouri project's success, PHNSY & IMF leadership began implementing Outward Mindset throughout the shipyard. The very basis of this concept is that our mindset drives our behavior. We may understand learning organization disciplines and our core values, but if we are engaging them from an inward mindset, our behaviors are self-serving and do not lend to the collective efforts or shared objectives of the shipyard. In fact, from an inward mindset, we can easily justify undermining these efforts altogether.

It may sound simple and maybe even obvious, but changing our behavior is one of the hardest things to do. Scientists cite multiple reasons people are resistant to change, often pointing to our core beliefs and values as significant contributing factors.

How do we overcome this challenge to changing our behaviors? According to the Arbinger Institute, shifting to an outward mindset lays a solid foundation for desired behavioral change.

The Outward Mindset training invites the opportunity for self-awareness and accountability. However, it is unrealistic to think of it as a magic pill that will solve all of our issues and challenges at the shipyard. It will take time and intentional effort from each of us to implement the tools we learn during Outward Mindset training.

As we embark on this journey to shift our mindset, we will encounter opportunities to engage from either an inward or an outward mindset. We can choose to shift valuable time and resources to the collaborative success of our shipyard.

To learn more about the Outward Mindset initiative at PHNSY & IMF, contact the C1180 Training Team or discuss with your supervisor.

In 2018, USS Missouri (SSN 780) docked at Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and Intermediate Maintenance Facility (PHNSY & IMF) and began an extended maintenance and modernization availability. While initially it seemed that it would be business as usual, the crew brought a unique tool that would contribute to an early delivery and a savings of $28.5 million. This tool is not necessarily tangible. It is a concept that invites a shift in mindset.

The Arbinger Institute's Outward Mindset work reveals that people operate from one of two distinct mindsets: an inward, self-focused mindset or an outward, others-inclusive mindset. From an inward mindset, people focus only on their own personal goals and objectives without considering their impact on others. However, when we have an outward mindset, we see others as equals with their needs, challenges and objectives mattering as much as our own. The Outward Mindset approach focuses on collective results compared to an inward mindset that only focuses on individual results; ours versus mine.

In the September/October 2020 supplement of Military Medicine, Missouri Commanding Officer Cmdr. George Howell said the opportunity to initiate a mindset shift began as the crew prepared to change Missouri's homeport to Pearl Harbor, which also included a transition into an extended maintenance period. Cmdr. Howell reported that in early 2018, there were multiple indicators of declining crew morale, accountability and performance. During the first nine months of 2018, his crew experienced 12 Captain's Mast proceedings (disciplinary actions), encountered 31 near-miss events requiring command-level attention, and formally declared 17 test program problems due to watch standing errors.

While innovation at Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and Intermediate Maintenance Facility (PHNSY & IMF) is not uncommon, many are unaware of the opportunities and resources that are available to assist your initiative. Hopefully, after reading this, you will know where to turn when you've got an idea.

The Shipyard's Innovation Program was established to cultivate a creative environment and continuous process improvement by removing barriers, connecting you with the right people, and assisting with funding initiatives. In short, we want to help take your idea and make it a reality. Code 100PI (Performance Improvement) and the Innovation Community of Practice (CoP) collaborate closely with the other public shipyards, Naval Sea Systems Command (NAVSEA), and other external partnerships to deploy new improvements, technology, and innovative efforts across the command.

Although the program is relatively new, it is continuously improving and supports a range of ideas from rapid prototyping of fixtures to more complex research and development (R&D) projects. In Fiscal Year 2020, the Innovation Program was approved for $1 million to support the fulfillment of various requests such as undertakings of Teledosimetry, the iLab Expansion, and the Cold Spray project. Additionally, NAVSEA funded the following R&D projects at PHNSY & IMF: Advanced Mobile Universal Electrical Tooling (AMUET), Main Condenser Waterjet Prototype, and the Metal X Printer. In Fiscal Year 2021, the program will receive $1 million from the innovation budget as well as an additional $1 million through NAVSEA funding.

Beyond funding, additional support is being provided for shipyard ventures. Code 2320 Nuclear Fluid Systems & Mechanical Engineering Division's 3D Laser Imaging project is one such initiative supported by the Innovation Program. This technology involves 3-dimensional laser scanners that digitally map out worksites. The scanners work similarly to panoramic photos that can be taken with a cell phone and produce colorized, dimensionally-accurate, virtual clones of a worksite.

"The Innovation Program has been a pivotal partner from the start by connecting the various stakeholders to clear barriers and connecting funding solutions to mature project developments," project lead Code 2320 Engineer Nelson Fernandez said. "The program continues to commit to the 3D Laser Imaging initiative and the attention required to support IT demands by working with the many facets of Code 109 Information Technology to meet project milestones while managing churn."

The 3D Laser Imaging project team's goal is to support shipyard customers by deploying laser scanners across availabilities to digitize shipboard spaces. 3D Laser Imaging will provide actionable data for project planning, support tech codes with relevant information for writing Technical Work Documents, empower mechanics with virtual ship checks, and foster the creation of more realistic training.

With support from the innovation community, the 3D Laser Imaging team is currently working through its first large scale implementation on a naval vessel. With the ability to perform virtual ship checks, the command's anticipated future benefits include a reducing costs and schedule significantly, minimizing the duration of work packages, and lessening workers' exposure.

Defining shipyard processes can be complex, but as the obstacles in our path are identified, we will continue to envision and produce innovative solutions that foster an imaginative environment and establish creative freedom.

If you are interested in representing your code or shop in the Innovation CoP or would like more information on how you can obtain funding from the Innovation Program or NAVSEA budget, please contact Shayla Deitch, Innovation Program Manager or Jayme Shimomura, Innovation Division Head in Code 100PI.

Outward Mindset Strategic Planning and Execution

IN-PERSON FACILITATED SERIES

OVERVIEW

This collaborative strategic planning and implementation process enables the development and achievement of organizational objectives and strategies while fostering cross-functional alignment and accountability.

It powerfully equips executive team members to take responsibility for their impact on the overall strategy and results of an organization by helping them plan their work to enable alignment in each of four directions—towards managers, coworkers, direct reports, and customers.

Executing the plans developed in this intensive series of sessions enables executive teams to embed deep accountability into the fabric of their organization.

PREPARATORY WORK

Prior to this process, participants should complete Arbinger's foundational training, Developing and Implementing an Outward Mindset. After meeting this prerequisite, the strategic planning and execution process begins with an assessment of current reporting structures, performance, and major internal and external factors. This assessment can be completed as offsite pre-work.

PROGRAM FORMAT

This program can be completed in four sessions, with time between each session to complete specific assignments. The time needed for each session will depend upon the size of the group and the complexity of the organization.

In the first session, participants begin developing a one-year plan for the organization. Completing this step first helps the organization more fully understand its capabilities and envision the results that are possible if people within the organization work together in a responsive and collaborative way.

With the outline of an organizational one-year plan in place, participants adjourn to develop individual work plans and budgets that will contribute to the success of the organization.

They then reconvene to present these plans, offer and receive feedback and help, and finalize an organizational one-year plan founded on collaborative cross-functional alignment.

In the third session, participants develop an implementation plan that outlines the reporting patterns, mechanisms, and frequencies required to achieve the identified organizational results.

Finally, the one-year plan is used as a baseline for a visioning exercise in which participants develop an attainable long-range plan.

RESULTS & OUTCOMES

Through engaging in this process, participants will be enabled to:

- Understand the impact of their work in order to plan and align their work with overall organizational objectives
- Develop key metrics to track, improve, and report impact in a way that invites and reinforces an outward focus
- Develop practices that invite transparency, heightened accountability, and collaborative problem-solving
- Engage people at all levels of the organization in planning and implementation, fostering broad ownership and support of the strategic plan
- Embed outward mindset into the fabric of the organization

Sample Strategic Planning and Execution Program

WORKSHOPS	ACTIVITIES	DELIVERABLES
 SESSION 1	Review and Establish: – Organizational strategic objectives – Key Performance Indicators – One-year organizational objectives – Key workflows and roles – Organizational reporting structure – Individual objectives for executives	Establishment or clarification of strategic priorities and objectives, KPIs, and reporting structure
ON-SITE ASSIGNMENTS	Develop: – One-year individual work plans for executive team members – One-year budgets for executive team members	Establishment or clarification of individual work plans and budgets, including measurable goals, objectives, and tasks
SESSION 2	Review and Refine: – Individual work plans – Individual budgets – Consolidated organizational one-year plan	Each team member offers and receives feedback and help on individual work plan Collaborative alignment across functions
SESSION 3	Plan Implementation: – Optimize one-year plan – Determine reporting patterns and frequencies – Establish or refine reporting mechanisms	Organizational implementation plan Outward mindset culture to accomplish the plan
SESSION 4	Look Ahead: – Ask big purpose questions – Envision the future: Five-year vision – Scale objectives and reporting structure – Forecast five-year financial picture	Five-year strategic plan that includes clear objectives and financial forecasts
